Hi Sukardi

Re : The Paper by Syukur Saud

Unfortunately there is no way around this but this is a very bad paper that has been failed by 3 reviewers. I'm not really sure you want your name associated with this work.

It has the primary basis for success but it seems after the Presentation the author was in too much of a hurry to send this out without having it reviewed by others in that field which he reports on.

Indeed it looked like a first year undergrad's paper – a few of the comments I received are :-

The paper lacks a clear RATIONALE. There is no logic to the paper

1. The paper didn't show any STATEMENT OF A PROBLEM and this is connected to the paper not having any RATIONALE. What is it the author trying to answer in his research?
2. The paper didn't show any relevance of the research to SLA and Language Teaching. It appears more of a lecture note than paper
3. Data interpretation esp. on translations failed to establish validity as there were no inter raters used in the research.

Point 4 is very serious. Translations must be certified by a registered translator –

At a first blush I also found the grammar and sentence structure problematic numerous times suggesting it was not reviewed by anyone for basic corrections.

The only option is for the author to re-write the whole paper taking into account the above notes and having a certified translator add his certification.

Cheers

Dear Dr. Paul Robertson

Please find our article entitled: comparative study of English and German syntactic variation by students at higher education: Evidence from Complex Predicates, which has been presented in the 1st Asian EFL Journal Conference on August 2018 in Pampanga, Philippines. The article has been revised and corrected according to the suggestions from the reviewers.

We very much hope that the article will be published in the Asian EFL Journal in the coming volume and issue.

Best regards,

Syukur Saud
