Reviewers' comments:

Reviewer:

The paper "Relation the entrepreneurship passion of farmer and the bank river management" deals with the entrepreneurship passion of farmer and its relation to flood and avalanche risk protection efforts seems adequate for the purposes of the journal. Nevertheless, I recommend to carefully consider the points detailed below to improve the quality of the paper: Introduction. The introduction should underline the aim of the paper, stress why this aim is important (with the support of the literature), summarise the methodology, and how the paper is organised. The authors should stress the discussion of the importance of this topic and the originality of the methodology, and provide a reminder explaining the structure of the manuscript. I recommend the authors to introduce a sentence at the beginning of the "literature review" section to justify that "The review of the literature has been conducted according to the review process defined by Pittaway et al. (2004) and Centobelli et al. (2016a, b) that are well-known in the field management and entrepreneurship literature": Pittaway et al. Networking and innovation: a systematic review of the evidence (2004) International Journal of Management Reviews, 56(34), 137-168.

Centobelli et al. The revolution of crowdfunding in social knowledge economy: Literature review and identification of business models (2016) Advanced Science Letters, 22 (5-6), pp. 1666-1669. Centobelli, P. et al. The evolution of engineering management education (2016) International Journal of Engineering Education, 32 (4), pp. 1813-1822. Pittaway et al. Entrepreneurship education: A systematic review of the evidence (2007) International Small Business Journal, 25 (5), pp. 479-510.
Proofreading of the revised manuscript is needed.

Furthermore, which are the strength points and weakness points of this research? In addition, the authors should describe and justify more in details how the application converge or diverge from other similar studies provided in the literature. As for the results, they should be commented and the conclusions should be better discussed as well as the implications. In terms of research implications, future research questions to be addressed by future empirical research, limitations of the study, etc. In addition, what kind of lesson emerges from the paper for future researchers, managers and/or policy makers?

LIST OF REVISION:

Comment	Revision
Introduction : The aim of the paper, stress why this aim is important (with the support of the literature), summarise the methodology, and how the paper is organised	The aim and the paper organized : This paper reviews the relationship between the entrepreneurial spirit of farmers in managing land on the riverbanks. To examine the issue of farmer's courage in determining farming strategy, the researcher undertakes the following study steps: Firstly, we introduce the literature on entrepreneurship passion and riverbank management to define the indicators of variables. Secondly, the researcher describes the research methodology and the results. Finally, the discussion about research findings and policy implications for the government to empower farmers through entrepreneurship education. The importance of aim : The entrepreneurship passion of farmers will contribute to develop innovations that can increase the crop production (Carlos Pinho & Sampaio de Sá, 2014; McElwee, 2006; Yuan, Liu, Ju, & Li, 2017).

	Farmers who manage land on the riverbank have a high opportunity of crop production related to land fertility. On the other hand, they also have a risk of crop failure due to flood and the risk of losing assets due to acalanche (Lullulangi, Ardi, Pertiwi, Bakhrani, & Dirawan, 2014; Rahman, 2010).
I recommend the authors to introduce a sentence at the beginning of the "literature review" section to justify that "The review of the literature has been conducted according to the review process defined by Pittaway et al. (2004) and Centobelli et al. (2016a,	Asset management activities by farmers are carried out in groups. Farmer innovation to protect assets and optimize crop production are developed with the networks formed between them. Equality of enthusiasm encourages the formation of networking for achieving goals. The network can take formally and informally and contribute to land management activities. Formal institutions facilitate the implementation of empowerment by the government while non-formal institutions are the connector between farmers in sharing their knowledge and innovation. (Pittaway, Robertson, Munir, Denyer, & Neely, 2004). The networking is a form of social enterprise that requires an entrepreneurial spirit for farmers. This is an important part in building entrepreneurship education for farmers (Pittaway & Cope, 2007). Moreover, the effort builds social economic potential for farmers based on three types of motivation, namely financial motivation (efforts to increase crop production), social motivation (efforts to build networks) and material motivation (efforts to protect land assets) (Centobelli, Cerchione, Esposito, & Raffa, 2016)
Comment	Revision
Furthermore, which are the strength points and weakness points of this research? In addition, the authors should describe and justify more in details how the application converge or diverge from other similar studies provided in the literature	Strength and weakness point : This study is an important part for local governments in determining riverbank maintenance strategies based on the ability of farmers' entrepreneurship. Furthermore, this study does not discuss the social potential of farmers collectively. The variables only represented the personal characteristics and have not revealed innovations that can grow positively with this potential. Application diverge of similar studies : Collectively, entrepreneurial education is important for farmers to develop innovation in the protection of land assets with river bank management. Social entrepreneurship will spread to the farming community with financial benefits (Sullivan Mort, Weerawardena, & Carnegie, 2003). The ability to determine an asset protection strategy will contribute to improving its welfare. With this capacity, the entrepreneur's passion will be a great social capital in improving welfare and improving the quality of the environment.(Centobelli et al., 2016)
The future research	The authors have an idea to develop the community empowerment model as farmer capacity models by exploiting the potential of entrepreneurship both personally and institutionally.
