Abstracts:

This study was aimed to investigate the implementation of English subject Curriculum used in Islamic secondary schools in Makassar city, South Sulawesi, Indonesia. Currently, English subject curriculum includes elements of English and characters as a new approach to replace the previous curriculum. The elements of English subject should be developed together with regional and national characters (values of cultures and beliefs). This study employed survey method and Delphi technique to collect the data. The survey method was used to analyze the elements of English and characters which were collected through eighty two curriculum developers and English teachers. Delphi technique was used to verify the results of the inclusion of elements of English and characters. It used meaningful communication with selected experts of English teachers and curriculum developers working in Islamic secondary schools. The experts answered a list of Delphi for two rounds and one another round was interviewed for final clarification. The findings confirmed that most respondents still had shortage experience to develop and implement this current English subject curriculum. The experts claimed that the practitioners in schools need to be trained to develop precise themes and topics and the ways to integrate the characters in the lesson plan and to evaluate the student's characters. Also, the practitioners in schools should make together the strategies to include characters for teaching English as recommended by the national education regulation. The conclusion concerned with this study, practitioners should know many cultures and characteristics of people in pluralism country as recommended by the curriculum.

Key words: characters, English subject curriculum, Islamic secondary school, Delphi method

This is to confirm that we totally agree to receive a printed copy if the article is accepted. We also declare that this paper was not published elsewhere and is not under consideration by any other journal.

We are looking forward to a hearing from you.

Best regards,

Andi Anto Patak

Dear Colleagues!

We wish to sincerely thank you for your research paper and express our appreciation for the fact you have chosen our journal for submitting your study.

We have carefully reviewed your article and would like to convey the following results:

Your research manuscript is scientific by its nature and contains interesting research topics. You have done a good job.

Your research is relevant for modern linguistic science.

However, despite these facts, in the opinion of our independent reviewers, we are unable to accept it for publishing at this time.

Our reviewers agree that you need to perform a more detailed and in-depth study of the problem. You need to examine in detail the research results of your foreign colleagues in this field or in related topics published in indexed journals (Scopus or Web of Science). This will enrich your research and make it truly 'cutting edge'.

We recommend that you familiarize yourself with the latest research results in the indexed journals and include citations from these journals in your article. This is our journal policy. It shows that authors who publish in our journal are familiar with the latest scientific research in their field. Pay more attention to this point.

We hope that you understand our decision and that you will continue cooperating with our journal.
